35 Years of the Crystal Party
Dear Friends,

Facing the greatest health care challenge of our time, the entire Mount Sinai Health System has responded with extraordinary dedication to protect the health and well-being of our communities. This is the guiding mission upon which The Mount Sinai Hospital was founded 168 years ago, and today, as never before, our physicians and staff are proving their commitment to that mission by leading the fight against COVID-19. This is Mount Sinai’s finest hour. So, it is with great pride that we share with you some of the Health System’s outstanding work at this critical moment in history.

Mount Sinai physicians, nurses, nurse practitioners, respiratory therapists, and medical assistants are on the front lines of the COVID-19 battle, courageously risking their own lives to care for severely ill patients. It is no overstatement to describe these medical professionals as modern American heroes. As a result of their awe-inspiring, tireless effort, Mount Sinai has saved thousands of lives.

Supporting our front-line COVID-19 caregivers is a Mount Sinai team that, day after day, has gone above and beyond the call of duty: brilliant scientists who are introducing new treatment approaches as they expand our understanding of COVID-19; generous Trustees who have been invaluable in tapping their contacts and donating time and money to ensure the delivery of essential equipment and to provide food and hotel accommodations for our hard-working staff; medical and postgraduate students who have selflessly volunteered across the Health System; and housekeepers who are risking exposure to the virus to ensure a sanitary environment in our hospitals, to name just a few.

Mount Sinai's traditions of innovation, collaboration, and resourcefulness are serving us well. A team of pulmonologists, anesthesiologists, sleep and critical care specialists, and Icahn School of Medicine at Mount Sinai students collaborated to repurpose variable positive airway pressure (VPAP) machines normally used for sleep apnea patients into ventilators that can save lives; then, they shared instructions for their innovation with hospitals across the globe. Our facilities team restructured The Mount Sinai Hospital to triple its number of intensive care unit beds, and reconstructed dozens of rooms into negative-pressure isolation rooms to prevent the disease from spreading.

Researchers at the Icahn School of Medicine at Mount Sinai have been working with urgency around the clock to unravel the mysteries of COVID-19 and discover effective treatments. In a matter of weeks, they have made substantial progress. Collaborating with scientists in Australia and Finland, Mount Sinai created a test that detects COVID-19 antibodies in a person’s blood as early as three days after the onset of coronavirus symptoms. Mount Sinai physicians have employed the test to transfer antibody-rich plasma from recovered COVID-19 patients to boost the immune response of critically ill patients fighting the disease, becoming one of the first health systems in the nation to undertake such a program.

Mount Sinai scientists also developed a test that can quickly assess a patient’s inflammatory response to COVID-19, a critical indicator because in severely ill patients the disease often ignites extreme inflammation that can be fatal. Mount Sinai physicians are relying upon these measurements in a clinical trial that employs a rheumatoid arthritis drug to reduce inflammation and improve patient outcomes. And, in yet another new treatment approach, Mount Sinai physicians successfully used a blood-clot-busting drug, tPA, as a life-saving measure for COVID-19 patients to clear blood clots in their lungs.

Mount Sinai researchers have also learned that SARS-CoV-2, the virus that causes COVID-19, invades the body stealthily, entering cells quietly, and consequently elicits a very muted immune response compared to the flu or other common respiratory viruses when the body secretes a family of proteins that assemble to prepare for a viral attack. This, Mount Sinai scientists believe, may account for the particularly lethal nature of COVID-19.

These COVID-19 insights and innovations come on top of Mount Sinai’s many research initiatives that are harnessing technology to drive new discoveries that will advance our ability to treat different forms of cancers, heart disease, brain disease, and other serious illnesses.

It is this exceptional work by our faculty, physicians, and scientists, and the expert, compassionate care of our providers, that make Mount Sinai one of the best health systems in the world.

Of course, Mount Sinai’s all-in response to COVID-19 has come at a financial cost. The crisis required aggressive spending to handle the onslaught of patients and has caused a significant loss of revenue due to the postponement of all elective surgery and routine doctor visits. Faced with this sudden imbalance, we must maintain Mount Sinai’s financial health. And, as the COVID-19 crisis has demonstrated, we must ensure that Mount Sinai remains a vital health care resource, providing outstanding care while generating cutting-edge research insights.
To meet that objective, we are continually investing in computing capability to enable Mount Sinai to be a leader in revolutionizing health care during what promises to be a golden age of advances in biomedicine. We are supporting our students with the Enhanced Scholarship Initiative, ensuring that the cost of a medical education is not a barrier for highly promising individuals seeking a career in medicine. We are investing in infrastructure to ensure that Mount Sinai’s care remains state-of-the-art and to make our facilities attractive, modern, and energy-efficient. Our patients should know they will receive the same exceptional level of compassionate care at all Mount Sinai locations. None of this can happen without generous, visionary philanthropists.

Mount Sinai’s historic response to the COVID-19 pandemic highlights how valuable every philanthropic dollar is to the Health System, and how vital Mount Sinai is to New York and to the world of medicine. With your support, the Mount Sinai Health System will continue to be prepared for any health emergency as we continue to be recognized as one of the very top academic medical centers in the nation.

While our Crystal Party tents are missing from Central Park this year—appropriately replaced by the tents of a Mount Sinai-affiliated emergency field hospital—we look forward to celebrating with you at next year’s Crystal Party.

Thank you very much for your partnership.
